

"Consider the Conversation"

A Beautiful Film about a Universal Subject

All too often, the end-of-life time is awkward for families and loved ones to discuss with one another. The result is an absence of the conversation and planning that can make this important time easier and less dominated by fear and anxiety.

Centered around a highly-acclaimed documentary film, this program helps consider many important aspects of the end-of-life process. It will offer ideas and suggestions for anticipating and navigating this challenging part of the life journey. Hospice is but one of many resources that can help families steer through this important time.

Care professionals will lead discussion and answer questions in response to the issues presented in the film.
